Prayer Gathering

Thought for the Month

I once stepped off a train at the wrong station in vast, homogenised Beijing. I was due to fly out in a few hours. My stuff was at a hostelry in the centre. As I realised my goof, the steel lattice gate behind me slammed shut for the night. I had no map or phone, and little money. The signage was indecipherable.

I stood stunned and lost. Then a small, pale-blue hatchback pulled up. The driver lowered the passenger window and said, 'Hotel?' and I gave the name. He drove smoothly and fast. In silence. The calm was so strange that, halfway to our goal, the idea struck me that this might be an angel. So, I poked him in the ribs. He only smiled, but seemed to understand, and still said nothing.

Ten minutes later I got out. He refused my cash and drove off with nary a word.

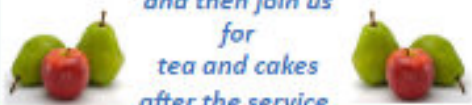

A verse in Hebrews reminds us to be hospitable to strangers, 'for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. But maybe it works the other way too.
